ABSTRAK

Data ikan dikumpulkan dari sejumlah penelitian lapangan dan pengumpulan dari pasar ikan dari berbagai tempat: Amfoang, Pulau Timor (Desember 2002); Biak, Papua (September 2000); Bitung, Sulawesi Utara (Juli, September dan Oktober 2000); Pulau Komodo (Juli 2001); Sungai Memberamo (Juni 1999); Riung, Pulau Flores (Juni 2001); Rote Timur, Pulau Rote (April 2003); Sorong, Papua (September 2000); Wini, Pulau Timor (Desember 2000) dan Kupang, Pulau Timor (1999-2003). Jumlah keseluruhan yang dikumpulkan ada 2007 spesimen yang tercakup dalam 88 famili, 260 genera, dan 632 spesies.

Kata kunci: spesies ikan, perairan pantai Indonesia bagian timur.

INTRODUCTION

The eastern Indonesian waters characterized with various ecosystems that are suitable for the development of the fishing activities. The ecosystems include mudflats, coral reefs, estuaries, mangrove swamps, coastal areas and continental shelves. As eastern parts of Indonesian waters are situated in the tropical Indo-Pacific, it has an extremely rich and varied of fish fauna. Munro (1967) shows that the territory of Papua sharing many of the elements of the Indian Ocean, the western part of Oceania and tropical Australia.

With coral reefs, coastal areas and continental shelves, marine fishes is one of the main marine food resources in this area and is also constitute an important export product especially tuna and shark fins. Although the fishing activity is become to modern fishing industry, fishing activity in eastern Indonesia still dominated by small-scale fisheries mainly concentrates on coastal areas. The most widely used gear is traditional net, such as light fishing, bamboo trap, seine net, gill net etc. The commercial fishing activities were observed in this area mainly concentrates on the bottom living crustaceans and fish, such as, shrimp, lutjanids, groupers etc.

Marine fishes is one of the main resources in Indonesia and marine food is also constitute an important export product especially shrimps. Intensive fishing in demersal resources is not only cause a decline of resources but also extension of certain species. Regarding to this condition fishing activities is needed to check on regular period. The present checklist of fishes is not expected to be a complete list. However, it contains almost a complete commercial species in eastern Indonesian waters. Thus, it is hope that this checklist will be used as a new baseline which can stimulate future research in Indonesia in general.

MATERIAL AND METHODS

This work is primarily a compilation of number of field research and fish market collections from a variety of localities : Amfoang, Timor Island (December 2002), Biak Papua (September 2000), Bitung, North Sulawesi (July, September and October 2000), Komodo Island (July 2001), Memberamo river (June 1999), Riung, Flores Island (June 2001), East Rote, Rote Island (April 2003), Sorong, Papua (September 2000), Wini, Timor Island (December 2000) and Kupang, Timor Island (1999-2003). Other sources of taxa information were also taken into account, these include photographic records and list of fish species from Marine Organism Conservation Station, Indonesian Research Institute, Ambon. Figure 1 shows the various localities of the fish specimen collection.

After field collection, the specimens were immediately photographed, labeled (CRDOA, Research Center and Development for Oceanology) and preserved in formalin solution 10% and deposit at Coral Reef Information and Training Center (CRITC)-Coremap-LIPI, Bappeda Provinsi Nusa Tenggara Timur, Kupang for further study. The nomenclature below and the classification mainly follow Nelson (1994), and fishes were identified with the help of keys given by Allen & Steene (1979), Allen (1997), Allen (1985), Bellwood & Choat (1989), Carpenter (1988), Carpenter & Allen (1989), Collette & Nauen (1983), Gloerfelt-Tarp & Kailola (1984), Heemstra & Randall (1993), Isa, et al. (1998), Masuda & Allen, (1987), Mohsin & Ambak (1996), Munro (1967), Myers (1988), Myers (1991), Nakabo (1995), Nakamura & Parin (1993), Nelson (1994), Randall & Heemstra (1991), Russel (1990), Russell (1983) and Whitehead (1973).

RESULTS

A total of 2007 specimens were collected from a variety of localities of the eastern parts of Indonesian waters (Table 1). All specimens consist of 88 families, 260 genera and 632 species. Riung (Flores Island), Bitung (North Sulawesi) and Kupang (Timor Island) were respectively with 434, 418 and 680 specimens.

The remainders are lower and widely ranging pelagic species and soft bottom habitats such as Sorong and Memberamo River (Papua).

With 269 species, Bitung (North Sulawesi) has higher number of species; follow Kupang, Timor Island (217 species); Riung, Flores Island (192 species); however, the fish collected of the Bitung has been more collected by various gear (beach seine, gill net, hand-line, fish market collection), particularly sampled using the ichthyocide rotenone. An annotated list of species is presented in Appendix 1.

General faunal composition

Inshore fishes are mostly associated coastal habitats such as coral reefs, seagrass beds and mangroves. The specimen collected of eastern Indonesian consists mainly species of coral reefs (1163 specimens) and seagrass beds (454 specimens) (Table 2 and Figure 2). Fish specimens data from pelagic and soft bottom in Sorong and Memberamo River are not well represented. Moreover, the field survey conducted at each locality were limited in time. So, the fish specimens could be expected to be higher than the actual results.

The ten most speciose families comprise 62.83% of the total specimens collected and the twenty most speciose families more than 79% of the total specimens collected. This percentage slightly lower than the ten dominant families in Christmas Island (Allen & Steene, 1979), Great barrier Reefs (Russell, 1983), Mariana island (Myers, 1988) and Micronesia (Myers, 1991). This could be explained that the collection in this area based of the economic value fishes and it is also several families such as gobiidae, blenniidae and other cryptic species are not well represented.

In terms of number of species are Labridae (wrasses), Lethrinidae (emperors), Lutjanidae (snappers), Pomacentridae (damselfishes), Serranidae (groupers), Nemipteridae (threadfin breams and spinycheeks), Carangidae (jacks), Mullidae (goatfishes), Scaridae (parrotfishes) and Acanthuridae (surgeonfishes) as shown Figure 3, while Figure 4 show the number of the species of the speciose families. The relative abundance of the species of this area is similar to other areas in the Indo-Pacific, although the ranking and the number of species is somewhat variable as shown in Figure 3 and 4.
