Abstract

The paper focuses upon the problem of trans-cultural transfer in subtitling of Die Hard 3 movie dialogues. Language and culture may thus be seen as being closely related and both aspects must be considered for translation. The methodology of the research involves analysis of the type and function of slang expressions and their translating strategies viewed from cultural perspective. The data reveal that in translation process the translator used the effect of softening. The consideration of the target reader is taken account in choosing the translation strategies. As the result, the authors found 7 specific slang expressions that were translated using loan translation. Meanwhile, the total number of general slang expressions from the movie was 90. There are six strategies applied by the translator to translate the slang expressions that belong to general slang type. They are; (1) Translating General Slang using common word or phrase of similar expressive meaning, (2) Translating General Slang using Shift or Translating General Slang using Transposition, (3) Translating General Slang using Omission, (4) Translating General Slang using Cultural Equivalent, (5) Translating General Slang using Swearing Words in Target Language, and (6) Translating General Slang using Synonymy.

Introduction

Slang as a language variation is created and used by a group of people who share the same situations or interests. Consequently, it is only understood by the members of the group. The purpose of using slang is to set themselves apart or to make it difficult for ordinary people to understand them. After years, slang becomes regular words and can be found in dictionaries. Film is a reflection of real life that exists in the society. Nowadays, slang is often used in western movie especially teenager films. Slang is usually used in teenager films because they are the group of society that often use it. Furthermore, with the development of globalization era, film should be enjoyed by all community, not just a certain groups. American films are popular almost in every country in the world, including in Indonesia. However, not all Indonesian people master English well, especially the variation of slangs. The process of translation, therefore, is needed in this case. In the translation of a film, the translator needs to convey the story of the film that uses English to Indonesian people who use Indonesian language as the main language.

A sample of translation of film from English into Indonesian appears on American movie: Die Hard. To translate the English slang expressions in this movie, the translator must be careful. It is related to the phenomena that language usage is bound by cultural background. Die Hard is an American movie which target audience is not only adults but also teenagers. So, the language used in this movie is not only formal English but also slang. Teenagers in America often use that kind of language when communicating in their community. Since slang is psychosocial and cultural phenomenon, the various problems often arise in the translation of slang. This is because of the differences in language systems and cultures from both source language and target language. In addition, English slang is an uncommon language which is not used in ordinary conversation in Indonesia. When translating slang into Indonesian as a target language the translator must consider the cultural background of the Indonesian audience. The translator should pay attention to the language variation.

Slang is bound to a culture. It is not easy, therefore, to translate words categorized as slang. As stated by Mathiello, cited in Bertuchelli at all (2007), there are some limitation that slang can be translated. In order to transmit cultural terms (for example slang) properly and accurately. First, a translator should first know the source and target language thoroughly. Second, the translator should be accustomed to the cultural customs, religious, beliefs and historical backgrounds of the two texts, and finally she/he needs to have proper understanding of the subject matter and the dominant concepts in the text. The more a translator is aware of complexities of differences between cultures, the better a translator s/he will be.

Thus, when the differences between languages and cultures are extremely great, the translator should be ready to perform various shifts during the process of translation as well as to choose the right translation strategy. Recreating the same effects in a different language community by means of an equivalent slang formation is nearly impossible. Translators should be aware that their translation corresponds to certain culture, readership, and conveys the proper meaning.

Review of Related Theories

1. Functions and Types of Slangs

Leech and Svartvik (1981: 26) assess the slang term in a following way. Slang is language which is very familiar in style, and it is usually restricted to the members of a particular social group, for example teenage slang, army slang, and theatre slang. Slang is not usually fully understood by people outside a particular social group, and so has a value of showing the intimacy and solidarity of its member. Eble (1996: 11) defines slang as an ever changing set of colloquial words and phrases that speakers use to establish or reinforce social identity or cohesiveness within a group or with a trend or fashion in society at large. The existence of vocabulary of this sort within a language is possibly as old as language itself, for slang seems to be part of any language used in ordinary interaction by a community large enough and diverse enough to have identifiable subgroups. In accordance with Eble, Kridalaksana (2008: 225) defines slang as a language and social phenomena that is eligible to be discussed. Slang is an unofficial language variety spoken by teenager or certain social groups for their internal communication, so other people do not understand their language. Slang is a new form of vocabulary and change.

Bailey and Robinson (1985) states, slang is believed to fulfill various functions for its users. Some scholars believe that slang users employ the variety for social identifications purposes, when they wish to indicate to others their origins. Slang may be used for humorous effect; to regulate social interactions whereby a group uses particular words for particular purposes such as in greeting and farewells. Furthermore, Thorne (2005: 3) states, functions of slang are outlined in two ways: Firstly, like any new coinage, a slang word may fill a gap in the existing lexicon. Secondly, a slang expression may be substituted for an existing term- what linguists refer to as 'relexicalisation'. While, Eble (1996: 116) highlights three general functions of slang: 1. Slang changes the level of discourse in the direction of informality, 2. Slang identifies members of a group, 3. Slang opposes established authority. It can be concluded that every member in a particular group must adapt to become a slang language users in the group.

There also some criteria to decide whether a word is considered as slang or not. Those criteria as proposed by Dumas and Lighter, cited in Eble, can be stated as the followings:

1. Its presence will markedly lower, at least for the moment, the dignity of formal or serious speech or writing.
2. Its use implies the user's special familiarity either with the referent of people who have such familiarity and use the term.
3. It is a tabooed term in ordinary discourse with person of higher social status or greater responsibility.

4. It is used in place of the well-known conventional synonym, especially in order (a) to protect the user from the discomfort caused by the conventional item or (b) to protect the user from the discomfort or annoyance of further elaboration.

The classification of slang is as ambiguous as its definition. From the comparison of the classification between slang and other similar language varieties, it seems that slang is more implicit due to its conceptual and terminological overlap. Willis (1964) states that there are two broad kinds of slang, slang items which come from or give new meanings to standard words and other slang items that are new inventions or at least have only a slight connection with established words. While other scholar, Matiello (2008: 35) states that there are two types of slang, specific slang and general slang. The following are explanation of each type.

- 1) Specific slang is language used by members of a particular group to show their respect for that group and solidarity with other group members. It is also used in order to underline speakers' identity, social status, age, education, special interests as well as their geographical belong. Therefore, it is mainly spoken by people of similar age. It can be considered as a standard language that can be found in the dictionary classified as a non formal or slang. For example teenagers: chick, Ok: cool.

- 2) General slang is language used by speakers to avoid conventions, seriousness. It is used instead of clichés and standard language to change the level of formality. For example, a drink: bevy, football: footy. Some words can be both specific and general according to context, for example the word grass is in specific slang 'marijuana' whereas in general slang it stands for 'green vegetables'.

More specifically, the types of slang expression can be divided based on its functions. They are as follows:

- 1) Group-identification and creativity

Slang is particularly used to show the identification and creativity from a certain group. It also oftenly used to show the membership or belonging to a group and establish solidarity with the other group members, for example those from college and teenageer. An example given by Mathiello (2008):

Sonny : "Come on,
Doody."

Doody : "Watch out!"

Sonny : "Putzie, move it out!

It's like a meat-ball in here!"

Putzie : "Let's go to find the chicks'".

The speakers in conversation above are high school students of the Rydell High. They share sex, age, education, and belong to the same gang, the T-birds. In the extract above, three „T-birds' (Sonny, Doody and Putzie) come out of the hatchback of a car parked in an open-air cinema. The term chick is commonly used for "a young chicken; sometimes the young of any bird", or occasionally as a term of endearment applied to human offspring. However, chicks is peculiarly used with the different slang sense of “girls; young women”. Here it serves to identify the speakers as belonging to a specific group (male teenagers) and show their need to be fresh and to play, creatively, with words and their meanings.

2) Privacy and Secrecy

The function of privacy and secrecy are related to marginal or isolated sub groups in society. For example criminals, generally use slang to hide information from people in authority. Another example is drug addict community. The example below is a boys’ conversation about some illegal drug traffics. Sick boy tries to persuade one of his mates, Mark Renton, to buy some drug:

Sick Boy : “There is a mate of Swanney’s.

Mikey : “you know the guy. He’s come into some gear. A lot of gears ”

Renton : “How much?”

Sick Boy : “About four kilos. So he tells me. Got drunk in a pub down by the docks last week, where he met two Russian sailors. They’re fucking carrying the stuff. For sale there and then, like.”

This extract illustrates the use of two terms (gears, stuff) that normally refer to “goods, matter or substance of any kind”. However, they convey a new specific sense among drug dealers (i.e. “(illicit) drugs, narcotics”), becoming marked in terms of transparency and biuniqueness, and making the conversation private.

3) Informality and intimacy

Eble (1996) states that the function of informality and the effect of intimacy are self-evident in general slang, which is language that speakers deliberately use to break with the standar language and to change the level of discourse in the direction of familiarity. It signals the speakers' intention to refuse conventions and their need to be colloquial, to ease social exchanges and induce friendliness. The speakers below (from Notting Hill) are the bookshop owner William Thacker, a typical middle-class Londoner, and his slovenly flatmate Spike. Here they talk about an underwater mask:

Jimmy : "Hey! You dog,
you."

Michael : "I'm a bit of a dog. Thanks so much Jimmy."

Jimmy : "Hey, all the best, huh?"

Jimmy addresses Michael by using the intimate slang appellative dog. The term dog is often reported in slang dictionaries with a wide variety of meanings and used with both positive and negative connotations (e.g. "afriend", "a foot", "a sexually unattractive person", etc.) Despite this, it is also the standard name of "a carnivorous mammal", and an abusive term for "a cur, a wretch". The result is vagueness and low transparency.

4) Vulgarity and Offensiveness

In general slang, the function of vulgarity regularly combines with an effect of offensiveness, particularly in slang which is used by speaker to criticize other people's appearance or behavior.<sup>13</sup> It signals the speakers' intention to be rude and impolite, making use of improper language, and of derogatory, even taboo words that often allude to the semantic area of 'sex'. The example below is taken from Notting Hill. The speakers are two friends of William who disapprove his behaviour with the famous actress Anna Scott:

Honey : "William's
just turned down Anna
Scott."

Spike : (to William)
"you daft prick."

The term prick, used by Spike, is a derogatory slang expression referring to "the penis", but also "a vulgar term of abuse for a man". It shows another effect of slang (offensiveness) produced by the speaker's choice of a rude lexically marked word to address someone he criticizes or condemns.

2. Strategies in Translating Slang

Expressions

Culture-specific concepts usually express concepts, which are totally unknown in the target culture. They may belong to material culture or social culture may include names of different institutions, political, religious and artistic concepts and so on. Translating these concepts may become a challenge for a translator. It can be even more challenging in terms of subtitling, because culture-specific concepts impose even more restrictions. Different scientists devoted their work to categorization of culture-specific concepts and to finding the most effective translation strategies. And it is even more complex when the translator is faced with the slang translation. Since slang is bound to culture, the strategies of translating it should consider the nature of both SL (Source Language) and TL (Target Language).

For the purpose of this research, the techniques or strategies in subtitling proposed by Peter Newmark (1988). Newmark's typology consists of fifteen strategies that can be employed as the followings:

- 1) Transference: it is the process of transferring an SL word to a TL text. It includes transliteration and is the same as what Harvey (2000:5) named "transcription."
- 2) Naturalization: it adapts the SL word first to the normal pronunciation, then to the normal morphology of the TL. (Newmark, 1988b:82)
- 3) Cultural equivalent: it means replacing a cultural word in the SL with a TL one. however, "they are not accurate" (Newmark, 1988b:83)
- 4) Functional equivalent: it requires the use of a culture-neutral word. (Newmark, 1988b:83)
- 5) Descriptive equivalent: in this procedure the meaning of the CBT is explained in several words. (Newmark, 1988b:83)
- 6) Componential analysis: it means "comparing an SL word with a TL word which has a similar meaning but is not an obvious one-to-one equivalent, by demonstrating first their common and then their differing sense

- components." (Newmark, 1988b:114)
- 7) Synonymy: it is a "near TL equivalent." Here economy trumps accuracy. (Newmark, 1988b:84)
- 8) Through-translation: it is the literal translation of common collocations, names of organizations and components of compounds. It can also be called: calque or loan translation. (Newmark, 1988b:84)
- 9) Shifts or transpositions: it involves a change in the grammar from SL to TL, for instance, (i) change from singular to plural, (ii) the change required when a specific SL structure does not exist in the TL, (iii) change of an SL verb to a TL word, change of an SL noun group to a TL noun and so forth. (Newmark, 1988b:86)
- 10) Modulation: it occurs when the translator reproduces the message of the original text in the TL text in conformity with the current norms of the TL, since the SL and the TL may appear dissimilar in terms of perspective. (Newmark, 1988b:88)
- 11) Recognized translation: it occurs when the translator "normally uses the official or the generally accepted translation of any institutional term." (Newmark, 1988b:89)
- 12) Compensation: it occurs when loss of meaning in one part of a sentence is compensated in another part. (Newmark, 1988b:90)
- 13) Paraphrase: in this procedure the meaning of the CBT is explained. Here the explanation is much more detailed than that of descriptive equivalent. (Newmark, 1988b:91)
- 14) Couplets: it occurs when the translator combines two different procedures. (Newmark, 1988b:91)
- 15) Notes: notes are additional information in a translation. (Newmark, 1988b:91)

Finding and Discussion

The data of English slang expressions in this research are divided into two types. These types are proposed by Matiello (2008: 35). They are specific slang and general slang.

a. Translation Technique of Specific Slang

Specific slang is language that speakers use to show their belonging to a group and establish solidarity or intimacy with the other group members. It is often used by speakers to create their own identity, including aspects such as social status, geographical belonging, age, education, occupation, lifestyle, and special interests. It is commonly found in the dictionary as a standard word and classified as an informal or slang word. The followings are the data of specific slang found in Die Hard 3. The translation strategy used by the translator is loan translation.

Table 1. Translation Specific Slang Using Loan Translation

7.	1863 01:40:00,154 -- > 01:40:03,021	I'm like that fucking Energizer bunny.	Aku seperti kelinci Energizer

b. Translation Technique of General Slang

General slang is language that speakers deliberately use to break with a standard language and to change the level of discourse in the direction of informality. It signals the speakers' intention to refuse conventions and their need to be fresh and startling in their expression, to ease social exchanges and endues friendliness, to reduce seriousness and to enrich the language. There are six strategies applied by the translator to translate the slang expressions that belong to general slang type. They are; (1) Translating General Slang using common word or phrase of similar expressive meaning, (2)

Translating General Slang using Shift or Translating General Slang using Transposition, (3) Translating General Slang using Omission, (4) Translating General Slang using Cultural Equivalent, (5) Translating General Slang using Swearing Words in Target Language, and (6) Translating General Slang using Synonymy. Below are the deep explanations.

CONCLUSION

The finding stated that there two categories of slang expression. They are specific slang and general slang. In the movie Die Hard 3, the writers found 7 specific slang expressions. The translation strategy chosen by the translator is loan translation. The slang expression of this movie is dominated by general slang. The writers found 90 expressions that were categorized as general slang. There are six strategies applied by the translator to translate the slang expressions that belong to general slang type. They are; (1) Translating General Slang using common word or phrase of similar expressive meaning, (2) Translating General Slang using Shift or Transposition, (3) Translating General Slang using Omission, (4) Translating General Slang using Cultural Equivalent, (5) Translating General Slang using Swearing Words in Target Language, and (6) Translating General Slang using Synonymy.

The softening strategy is applied by the translator in translating the swearing terms in most of dialogues. It softens the utterance in TL. The purpose of softening effect is to soften the rudeness and vulgarity of slang when it contains negative connotations or its usage is inappropriate in the translation, for this reason the other word with the proper meaning is chosen. This translation strategy is particularly useful in the translation of dirty slang words, denoting sex and swearing, since they are especially censored in translation of the target language (TL).
