INTRODUCTION

The art of Uzbek folk art is multifaceted and diverse - rich in different genres. According to their forms, singing and instrumental melodies consist of two groups: the performer at set times and situations, and the performer at any time. The first group includes songs related to tradition, the labor process, various ceremonies, staged performances, and games.

The Uzbek people are famous for their music. A spoon is a verse of a poetic text or a couplet composed of a small melody covering two bytes. In addition to the types of songs, there is the art of "lapar" and "yalla" which are coupled songs. The genre of the dancing art of the masculine melody is intended in the performance of a humorous dance. Lapar is a singing conversation. In Khorezm they are called solo performers. In some districts, the term “lapar” is used for the song “Ulan” (performed as a conversation between women and men) at wedding parties. The genre of "Yalla" consists of two different songs: a short-range melody, and the song - a solo performance at the same time as the dance.

The poetic texts of the songs are used in folk and professional poetry of Eastern poets. More advanced examples of songs are, in essence, professional music of oral traditions. The main place in the Uzbek musical heritage is occupied by the epic-narrative work in the form of artistic speech. Dances differ in different regions of Uzbekistan. Fergana dance is characterized by exceptional softness, fluency and expressiveness of movements, ease of shifting steps, distinctive movements in places and rotations. In Khorezm and Bukhara regions she dances with kayraks. It is said that in order to understand this or that culture, to feel the life and way of life of the people, it is necessary to listen to its national melodies. In some regions of Uzbekistan, local styles of folk music Fergana-Tashkent, Bukhara-Samarkand, Surkhandarya-Kashkadarya and Khorezm are preferred. In Tashkent and Fergana regions, the genre of big ashula or patnis ashula (songs performed with patnis) is very popular. epics and plays are peculiar[1;-23].
