

THE ADAPTION OF WOMEN WHO WORK AS A SPLIT STONE IN CIAPUS RIVER, BOGOR

Nurul Qomariyah¹
MM. Nilam Widyarini²

(1-2) Faculty of Psychologi Gunadarma University

ABSTRACT

There are many evidences to show that there's been a perspective movement about attitude, activity, gender role differences between men and women that affect another movement in the work field for both men and women. Women can be found work as a driver, labor, sailor, lawyer and many more. On the other side, men are also can be found work as designer, stylist, capster, dancer, and many more. The demand inside herself make women who work in masculine work field feels uncomfortable because it's not something that usual for her stereotype work field. The aim of this study is to know the description about the adaptation, its processes, and factors influencing the women's adaptation who work in masculine work field with qualitative method. Participant of this study is a women who work as split stone in Ciapus river, Bogor. The result shows participant has a good adaptation that can be seen in her adaptation aspects and characteristics.

Key words: adaptation, working women, masculine work field